

Social Dimensions of Health Institute is a research institute co-funded by the Universities of St Andrews and Dundee.

Part of the Economic and Social Research Council
Festival of Social Science and Dundee Science Festival

If you could change the way GP surgeries operate, which parts would you like to change and which would be most important to you?

Find out how you can register to become a participant in research using your health related experiences.

How can craft and digital technology help connect children with life limiting conditions with the people at the centre of their world? - Check out KISTproject and also TalkITive - developed to help communication between service providers and families.

What questions do you think feedback forms about health care should be asking and can you think of better ways to ask these questions?

What do you think is important in recovering from a stroke?

What does loneliness mean to you? Is this different for different people? If so Why?

Find out more about how one research group is testing a new screening programme for the early detection of lung cancer.

Presenting Lisa Nicoll in a one woman play “Acceptance” in the Steps Theatre - 1.00pm. Drawn from real experiences, this is a tale about a 30 year old woman who starts to question her use of alcohol to gain social acceptance since her mid teens. Quiz Lisa afterwards.

Come and ask questions, try some puzzles, find out more about some of the things going on in the area.

People’s knowledge and experience is central to much of the research we do and we want to take this opportunity to tell you about the work going on and to get feedback from you, which will help us make sure that we are looking at the right things, asking the right questions and asking them in the right way.

