The Association of Scottish Community Councils is the national representative and campaigning body for all the Community Councils of Scotland. It is independent of all governments - national and local, and all other interests. Its elected representatives are chosen by Community Councils, and are themselves Community Councillors. It was founded by Community Councils in 1994, in response to the proposals to reorganise local government, with a mission to ensure the voice of Community Councils was not lost in the new unitary local authorities.
